Before You Plan Your Halloween Fun

The traditional boo won't do if your child will be dressing up in a wheelchair, or hates the feel of seams and scratchy closures and makeup and masks. Check these articles for costume ideas that keep your child's needs in mind -- or accommodate last-minute mind-changes. For kids whose choices of costume or candy are restricted due to special needs, Halloween's not always such a treat. Try these tricks to keep the haunted holiday from being the wrong kind of scary. <http://specialchildren.about.com/od/halloween/bb/halloweenhelp.htm>

We have been given a gift. His name is Ryan Ries. Ryan came into our family four years ago, and he changed the game. He changed the expectation of a respite provider and habilitator. Ryan doesn't need instruction; he actually gives US instruction.. Ryan has changed our daughter's life by making her successful and more independent. Attached is a picture of Ryan and Ella. I forgot to mention that on top of everything else he does, he also is Ella's birthday party entertainment. Here, he is her Prince Charming for her Grand Ball birthday party. Priceless. Thank you, Carly and Chad Parkhill

Zoowalk for Autism Research

Saturday, October 4, 2014!

The Zoowalk for Autism Research is an annual walk held to raise funds for the Autism/Asperger's Research program at ASU. The walk is a family-oriented gathering that anyone can join, including children, adults, grandparents, students, corporate teams and more.

Celebrating its 10th Anniversary!

So gather your friends, family, and coworkers and enjoy a beautiful walk around the Phoenix Zoo while supporting our mission to find effective treatments for autism!
